Interface Design II

October 15, 2015

As a college student, I want to have a good source of entertainment at my dorm that doesn't take up too much space.

As a parent of younger children, I want essentially zero screen-time involved when introducing my children to digital interactions.

As a parent of older children, I want to use technology to keep my kids interested in family game nights.

As a social butterfly, I want an easy way to share my digital activities with friends.

As an avid smartphone user, I want to be more engaged with my surroundings.

As an artist, I want my canvas to be available anywhere at anytime.

As a table-top gamer, I want to interact with games in a more natural way.

As a digital gamer, I want the option of getting up and moving around while playing games.

As a digital gamer, I want more choices in the way I interact with a platform/console.

As a foodie, I want follow along with recipes easily while cooking or baking.

As an older adult, I want to enjoy new devices with simple setup and little to no maintenance.

As a career-driven individual, I want a productivity tool that is accessible from anywhere and "just works".

As a developer, I want to develop for a platform that will make me a better interaction designer.

As a mobile developer, I want to utilize space and the user's movement to make games that are more engaging and fun.

As a person with poor eyesight, I want the content on phones and computers to be larger and easy to read, without restricting the experience.

As a product manager, I want a flexible collaboration tool that my entire team can interact with individually and also at meetings.

As an educator, I want a tool that helps lessons and lectures to become more fun and immersive.

As an educator, I want a learning tool that keeps kids moving around during class.

As a film-buff, I want the portability of watching movies on my mobile device without having to stare at a tiny screen.

As a musician, I want a natural way to lay down digital drum tracks and mix my music.

As a gambler, I want to enjoy the casino experience without losing any money.

As someone who is disorganized, I want an easy and visual way to manage my schedule and to-do list.
